Claremont assistant city manager's meteoric rise

by Steven Felschundneff
 steven@claremont-courier.com

People love a good “bootstraps” success story, and while not a rags to riches narrative per se, Assistant City Manager Jamie Earl’s ascension to city hall has nonetheless been meteoric.

In August 2010 Earl was 20 and had just returned to her native Chino Hills following two years at San Jose State University. Pondering the next stage of her life, an acquaintance suggested she apply to be a senior recreational leader in Claremont.

“I was already back working at my high school job [Applebee’s in Chino], but I was interested in adding a second part-time job while I attended Cal State Fullerton,” Earl said.

The interview must have gone well, because soon she was sitting behind the reception desk at the Hughes Center helping people sign up for contract class and facility rentals and preparing the various meeting rooms for community groups.

“I definitely filled in everywhere,” she said.

As Earl explains it, everyone in the Human Services Department participated in the preparation and implementation of special events such as Fourth of July and the holiday promenade. These tasks served as Earl’s introduction into the workings of local government, which she found appealing.

In August 2012 she moved into a full-time position as the city’s special events coordinator, taking on more of a lead role in Claremont’s many public events. The job introduced the then 22-year-old to “council relations” due in part to the necessity of ensuring that Claremont City Council members were in the right place at the right time during these events. She also helped the city’s elected officials craft the remarks they made to the public.

Around that same time, Earl earned a bachelor’s degree in health science from California State University, Fullerton. Although she enjoyed the many tasks in her new job, upon graduation she pictured herself becoming an athletic trainer, physical therapist, or perhaps attending nursing school.

But as time passed, the idea of staying in civil service started to take hold. She found she enjoyed the many tasks in special events, a job where “you are making so many people happy.” That is when Earl figured that government, specifically in Claremont, was where she wanted to be.

In August 2014 the city created a new management analyst position in community development and Earl was eager to give it a try.

Working with former community development director Brian Desatnik, Earl began to deal more directly with policy, including Claremont’s Inclusionary Housing Program, and making presentations during City Council meetings.

“Community development I would say was dipping my toes in the water of the city hall side of things,” Earl said. “I liked that and knew I was a good fit for it, working closely with the director. Being someone’s right hand felt natural to me.”

Her next move, perhaps not surprisingly, came in August 2016 when she became the senior management analyst in then City Manager Tony Ramos’ office. The job was a lot more project-based, and included taking on programs that didn’t fit in other departments, picking up the slack if another office was short-staffed, and overseeing the budget and day-to-day finances of the city manager’s office.

“Those were very busy years that were heavy in projects, [including] the affordable housing agreement for the Base Line development and working on the original al fresco program,” Earl said.

From there she was promoted to assistant to the city manager in December 2017, and in November 2020 became the acting assistant city manager when Colin Tudor left. She earned the permanent role in March 2021.

With such an important job came a lot of responsibility, and the rewards of the position are offset by the many challenges. Earl said it comes down to establishing a balance, whether it be other people’s expectations, including the public’s, or different levels of government.

“In addition to balancing the myriad of regulations and legislation from different levels of government, I think one of the challenges is managing resources and priorities of everyone my position serves — the City Council, the city manager, the community, all of our staff — especially when those priorities or expectations maybe don't always align," Earl said. "I came to the realization early on in my current position that you may not necessarily make everyone happy at the same time, but I am motivated by the challenge and feel accomplished when we can come to a consensus or at the least a compromise."

When Earl is not at work, which takes up most of her waking hours, she likes to spend time at the beach near the Costa Mesa home she shares with her husband, Mike Earl. They also enjoy the desert and boating on the Colorado River.

"I also like to read, when I have time, which typically only happens when I'm on vacation, spend time with my 3-year-old nephew Hudson, travel with my husband, listen to podcasts, and I do have a paddleboard, which I hope to use more this year and when it heats up a little," Earl said.

In the year ahead Earl would like to wrap up the affordable housing project on Base Line Road that she helped craft when she was a senior management analyst. In addition, she would like to see the city fund improvements to the police station, specifically the women's locker room, which she described as being completely inadequate. She would also like to find ways to support the city's employees, perhaps through reinstating training that was cut due to tight budgets.

"We are a slim organization, so everyone wears a lot of hats," Earl said. "It's rewarding to see people grow. I obviously have grown through this organization, so have a lot of others. We have a lot of long-term employees and they are so dedicated to the Claremont community."

As a parting shot, the Courier asked Earl what she enjoys about working for Claremont.

"Serving the community in general gives me joy, but I also wanted to mention that in the hustle of the usual work day, I sometimes get unexpected calls or messages from community members either praising our staff or just wanting to learn more about a program, or even a Boy Scout doing a project who calls for a quick phone interview. Those calls aren't a daily occurrence, but they are some of my favorite times and bring me a lot of joy and even sometimes bring back into perspective why I'm here and how fortunate I am to serve the community," she said.

Employment equals success for local nonprofit

by Andrew Alonzo
aalonzo@claremont-courier.com

For more than a decade, Claremont resident Kari Anderson has been focused on finding jobs for the disabled community.

“We are an organization that assists individuals that are referred to us from the California Department of Rehabilitation that would like to go to work, but may just need a little bit of help getting to work,” said the co-founder and CEO of Claremont nonprofit Employment Means Success.

The organization, founded in 2012, helps its clients with job-finding skills such as resume building, interview skills, job coaching, etc., and arranges physical accommodations for them in the workplace. It also assists workers in other ways.

“If they have any issues, they can call and say, ‘Hey, I’m having this issue with a coworker; I need this particular adaptive equipment,’” Anderson said. “Then after that, the idea is they then have the tools if in the future they wanted to get a different job. They could do that on their own without going back to the state.”

The organization’s credo is simple: employment equals success.

“If anyone were ever to call me and say they got the job, and I’m not ecstatic about it, that is the day I’ll resign,” Anderson said. “And that day has not happened yet, and I don’t foresee it’s going to happen.”

Anderson grew up in Upland. Her career in service started at about six years old, when she learned she had Type 1 diabetes.

“That sort of got me into the realm of recognizing maybe people that have a hidden disability,” she said. Anderson’s parents also instilled in her that being helpful fills the heart.

“Both of my parents were pretty philanthropic,” she said. “Growing up, it was just sort of assumed you had to do something to give back. The idea was that you do it for selfless reasons because you end up getting more out of it. I got to see that with my parents, and it felt good when I got to do something for somebody else.”

While at Pomona Catholic High School, Anderson became part of the American Diabetes Association and actively lobbied for the passage of the American With Disabilities Act. She also worked at summer camps for youth with diabetes.

In 2005, a few years after graduating from California State University, Fullerton, Anderson began working for Claremont’s Service Center for Independent Life. The work, “opened my eyes to what's possible for people," she said.

Two years later Anderson became head of the nonprofit's deaf and hard of hearing program, which placed sign language interpreters on short notice in private and hospital settings.

After several years with SCIL, she and a former business partner co-founded EMS.

"Our brick and mortar was right around the corner from SCIL — when we had one — and we did that intentionally because it was close to the Foothill Transit, close to the Metrolink, it was also close to the [Metropolitan Transportation Authority station]," she said. "We thought everyone would come to us."

But that wasn't the case. It soon became apparent the department of rehabilitation wanted EMS to see their clients at their offices in Ontario or El Monte.

After the pandemic all but severed in-person contact in March 2020, EMS went fully virtual. Due to its online success, EMS gave up its physical location, but staffers will still meet in person with clients when necessary.

Kari Anderson is the co-founder and CEO of Employment Means Success. Courier photo/Andrew Alonzo

"We survived the pandemic, and the rest is kind of history," Anderson said.

The nonprofit's success stories are vast and include the likes of Rosie Negrete, who, after receiving job training from

EMS, in March 2021 became the first completely blind person to work at an Amazon fulfillment center warehouse in San Bernardino County.

Negrete has moved into her own apartment and is living independently for the first time in her life.

Success stories like these are many, and Anderson hopes to continue expanding EMS services beyond Riverside, San Bernardino, Los Angeles and San Diego counties.

“If I can be in a position to educate an employer or somebody in the community like, ‘This isn’t as intimidating or as costly to hire an individual who happens to have a disability,’ that’s rewarding to me,” she said. “I wouldn’t want to do anything else.”

Anderson traded her home in Upland for one in Claremont three and a half years ago, and can often be seen around town with her service dog Lizzy, a two-year-old Labrador retriever. She’s been a member of Claremont Sunrise Rotary for 14 years, and served as its president in 2010 and 2017.

Anderson is eager to hear from local businesses that would be open to employing those with disabilities.

“There’s zero cost to the employer, and there are tax incentives if they hire individuals who happen to have a disability,” she said. “Statistically, if you hire someone who’s been identified to have a disability, they’re less likely to call in sick, they’re less likely to quit on you, and you’re less likely as an employer to have a worker’s comp case.” Such research is available at accenture.com and askjan.org/topics/costs.cfm.

Chaos reigns, but humanity shines through

Webb student spends winter break in China

by Jenny Wang
Special to the Courier

This winter break, I traveled back home to China for the first time in three years.

Contrary to the colorful reunions with childhood friends and relatives and food-tasting adventures I so wistfully pictured, upon arrival I was greeted with virtually all my family, friends, relatives, and neighbors testing positive for COVID-19.

Why the drastic change? Since the start of the pandemic, China has combated Covid with an iron fist. However, the recent residential fire in Xinjiang that killed 10 residents sparked massive protests against the country's unrelenting zero Covid policy.

In response to these demonstrations, China completely shifted its stance on the virus, removing city lockdown measures and QR code requirements and allowing infected people to stay at home instead of traveling to state quarantine facilities, also known as “方舱医院” in Mandarin.

While many people cheered the loosening policy, a dire consequence ensued: the highly contagious omicron variant

The local grocery store in Foshan was nearly empty when the author stopped in with her father. Courier photo/Jenny Wang spread across the country with appalling speed, and people rushed to pharmacies to stock up on basic medicine products like thermometers and Ibuprofen.

Despite the unraveling of some Covid-related state policies, I was still subjected to a strict five-day quarantine at a hotel, and did not fully comprehend the scale of the situation until I was released.

I saw people struggle with what to do after catching Covid because there were no professional medical authorities to provide clear instructions. We were left on our own to self-diagnose and find appropriate treatment, which descended into chaos. Audio recordings from so called “medical experts” dominated the family WeChat groups and public posts, many of which later turned out to be fake.

People who listened to wrong advice about taking “Lianhua Qingwen,” a traditional Chinese medicine used for the treatment of influenza, overtaxed their bodies' organs and became even sicker.

Others' conditions worsened after taking traditional Chinese medicine alongside Western medicine. Overwhelmed by the turbulent environment, some even began taking medicine before feeling any symptoms — a decision that soon backfired.

Amidst the chaos, I witnessed the local supermarket shelves completely swept empty of groceries. So many people took sick leaves that my cousin's 15-person office was ultimately left with just her and a single other colleague.

Doctors continued working long shifts to treat patients while battling the virus themselves. Funeral homes flooded with coffin requests.

Though my descriptions may sound bleak and depressing, despite punctured hopes of hot springs and food-tasting adventures and having caught the virus myself during winter break, I am still glad to have made the trip. Rather than dwelling on the negative consequences that came with this outbreak, I found myself captivated by the collective resilience, selflessness, and hope shown by numerous people within my close social circle and on social media.

At the age of 92, my grandpa traveled across five provinces just to reunite with his granddaughter. My elementary teacher, Ms. Zhang, moved to quarantine in a hotel when she tested positive for fear of infecting her husband and daughter. The owner of the local pharmacy, with whom we have no personal connections, offered us free medicine as soon as he learned we were running out of Tylenol.

These warm moments of solidarity reminded me of the interconnectedness within our communities, both in Guangzhou and Claremont. Although this outbreak was unexpected and traumatic for many, it also revealed the beautiful little moments that exist in our day-to-day interactions.

Moving forward into a post-Covid world, we must remember that it is precisely the relationships and experiences we form that allow us to withstand disasters with courage and tenacity.

Jenny Wang, 16, is a junior at The Webb Schools, where she is the copy editor of the Webb Canyon Chronicle. Jenny plans to study international relations and journalism in college.

Upon the author's arrival at the Guangzhou Baiyun International Airport, she was greeted by medical workers in white coats who instructed her to take a COVID-19 vaccine before proceeding to a hotel, where she quarantined for five days. Courier photo/Jenny Wang

Retired School Teacher Blossoms at Claremont Manor

When retired school teacher Nancy Feyrer and her husband decided to move to Claremont Manor for its friendliness, beauty and charm, she wasn't sure what opportunities lay ahead. Was she ever pleasantly surprised.

"I am a retired school teacher who likes to volunteer so I was never shy, but once I moved here an entirely new world opened up for me socially," Nancy said. "I decided to volunteer at the skilled nursing Care Center here. That volunteer opportunity changed my life. I know all of the residents and staff and they are like my family." Nancy soon expanded her volunteerism by working shifts in the resident store, The Arbor, and at the resident-run library — two experiences she thoroughly enjoys.

"I soon realized The Arbor is more than just a store, it's also a gathering place to meet new friends and catch up with old ones," she said. "I am also a volunteer hostess for newcomers at Claremont Manor. I show them around, introduce them to neighbors and activities and make them feel at home during their first few weeks here. But I think my most ambitious volunteer opportunity is in our resident library. I had no experience working in a library but that's okay, because around here, there is always a friendly face to lend me a hand."

Nancy has lived at Claremont Manor since 2020, but her first introduction to the community was years earlier. "My husband and I were invited for lunch by our friends who lived here," Nancy recalled. "At that time, we were not considering moving to a retirement community, but something special happened during that and other visits. We were so impressed with the beautiful landscape, classic brick buildings, cottages and most of all the friendly people. In the back of our minds we knew this would someday be our home."

Soon after the couple toured a beautiful apartment. "As soon as we walked in we knew it was just for us," Nancy said. "We were home!"

"I remind my friends who are both considering and not considering moving into a retirement community that here there is no cooking, cleaning, maintenance or housework," Nancy said. "Instead, you are free to pursue your hobbies and passions as well as discover new ones."

Claremont Manor offers multiple levels of care including independent living, assisted living, memory care and skilled nursing and a wide variety of accommodations ranging from studios to two-bedroom apartments and cottages.

ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF POMONA VALLEY

693 N. Palomares St., Pomona • 909-629-6142 • alpv.org

The League operates a center providing services for children whose families cannot afford dental care. The league also sponsors the Operation School Bell program, providing school clothing for children in need and a Christmas program that reaches many families each year. The Assistance League produces Assault Survivor Kits, as well as the Cubs for Kids distribution that gives teddy bears to children experiencing trauma. Volunteers and clothing needed.

CHILDREN'S FOUNDATION OF AMERICA

PO Box 1210, Claremont • 909-426-0773 • childrensfoundationofamerica.org

Claremont-based nonprofit providing an opportunity for every person to help children heal, learn and thrive. Over 400,000 children each year are unable to live with their families due to abuse, neglect, or abandonment. These children in foster care, shelters, and underserved communities are often not afforded the same opportunities as their peers. With the support of donors and volunteers like you, the Children's Foundation of America provides children in need with new backpacks, school supplies, graduation and prom attire, holiday and birthday gifts, scholarships, handmade blankets and cards, music lessons, tutoring, new clothes and shoes, and so much more.

Get involved with volunteer and fundraising activities throughout the year. Be the difference: Bring hope and joy to the lives of children in need.

WEST END AUXILIARY OF CHILDREN'S FUND

P.O. Box 134, Claremont • Contact: Sherry Hughes
909-973-6668 • westendauxiliary.org

Its mission is giving vulnerable children support, opportunity, and hope by breaking destructive cycles through community partnerships. The purpose of this organization is to raise community awareness, raise funds and carry out projects in support of children at risk. Support is given through an emergency needs program, care campaigns, and a holiday celebration of giving. Opportunity is given to foster youth by providing college scholarships, mentoring programs, computer camps and sports camps. Hope is given to children suffering child physical abuse, sexual abuse, and neglect by being evaluated and cared for at the children's assessment center. More than 66,215 children and vulnerable youth benefited from the funds donated this past year.
